Eye for the Tailor: The Basics for Men's Jeans

By [Author Name]

For the past few years, I've been a fan of denim. I've bought a lot of jeans, and I've learned a lot about them. I've found that the best jeans are the ones that are made with high-quality denim and that have a good fit. I've also learned that the best jeans are the ones that are made in the USA.

When you're buying jeans, there are a few things you should look for. First, you should look for a pair of jeans that are made with high-quality denim. This means you should look for a pair of jeans that are made with a heavy weight of denim, and that have a good weave. Second, you should look for a pair of jeans that have a good fit. This means you should look for a pair of jeans that are not too tight and not too loose. Finally, you should look for a pair of jeans that are made in the USA.

Tallason for Tennis de Nimes

at May 2016, 22:02 | Posted in Dresses | No comments >

Tennis court line stain on featured jersey dress.

During my Tennis de Nimes has taken stock of an exclusive run of 24 pieces produced by Ben Fombruno's Tallason. Those familiar with Tallason might remember their presence in small batch items so-called jeans, and if so let this be a first example. The dress itself comes from Core Mills White Oak plant and features a specially designed patch from Portland's Tenner Goods (the Tallason "T" logo) with the Tennis de Nimes name.

In celebration of the release the shop has conducted a brief and thoughtful interview with Tallason founders Corey Franklin and Pete Scorsone, now available on their blog.

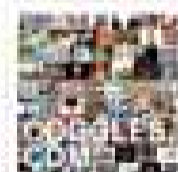

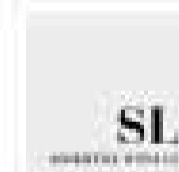

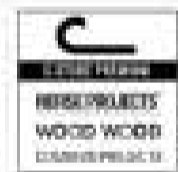

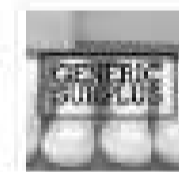

Each of the 24 pairs is hand numbered and will run a shade under 200 Euro. Details after the jump.
